Let's Be Curious Again

The Art of Asking Good Questions

Discover more. Assume less. Build deeper relationships.

What might we discover if we spent more time being genuinely curious about the people and the world around us?

1. Discover the people around you

- What is something about you that most people don't know?
- What experience has shaped who you are today?
- What are you learning right now?

2. Discover your family history

- What was life like for you growing up?
- What is the story behind one of our family traditions?
- What lessons do you hope future generations will remember?

3. Discover your community and country

- How has our community changed in your lifetime?
- What is something our grandparents understood that we may have forgotten?
- What could we do together to make our community better?

4. Seek to understand rather than assume

- What experiences have shaped your perspective?
- What do you know that I could benefit from learning?
- Can you help me understand why that matters to you?

Five habits of a curious person

- Ask without an agenda.
- Listen without interrupting.
- Resist the urge to correct.
- Ask a follow-up question.
- Leave room to be surprised.

YOUR CHALLENGE: Choose three questions.
Find someone to ask. Give them your undivided attention.

Be curious. You will discover something remarkable about someone you thought you already knew.
